CHINESE VISA SAMPLE 1:

The different letters stands for different types of visas to enter mainland China.

The number or letter here stands for times the holder may enter mainland China with the visa. “1” means the holder can enter mainland China once; “2” means twice; “M” means multiple.

This date is the last day for the holder to use this visa to enter mainland China.

This is the serial number of the visa.

This is the maximum number of days the holder may stay after he enters mainland China.

This date is the starting day for the holder to use this visa to enter mainland China.

This indicates the city where the visa is issued.

This is abbreviation of the holder’s name.

This indicates the passport number of the visa-holder.

This is date of birth of the holder.

This is machine-readable information of the visa.

CHINESE VISA SAMPLE 2 (to HKSAR):

The different letters stands for different types of visas to enter HKSAR.

This indicates the visa is only for the holder to enter HKSAR.

The number or letter here stands for times the holder may enter HKASR with the visa. “1” means the holder can enter HKSAR once; “2” means twice; “M” means multiple.

This date is the last day for the holder to use this visa to enter HKSAR.

This is the serial number of the visa.

This is the maximum number of days the holder may stay after he enters HKSAR.

This date is the starting day for the holder to use this visa to enter HKSAR.

This indicates the city where the visa is issued.

This is abbreviation of the holder’s name.

This indicates the passport number of the visa-holder.

This is date of birth of the holder.

This is machine-readable information of the visa.